SAN DIEGO -- December 11, 2000 -- Qualcomm Incorporated (Nasdaq: QCOM) and Tektronix, Inc. (NYSE: TEK) today announced that they have entered into an amended license agreement expanding Tektronix' existing Code Division Multiple Access (CDMA) license agreement with Qualcomm. Tektronix will use the license to develop and manufacture third-generation (3G) test solutions for the wireless industry. These next-generation products will operate on higher-capacity wireless networks, deployed to meet the growing demands for high-speed wireless data applications and Internet access.

"This 3G license agreement amendment for Qualcomm's essential patent portfolio at industry-standard royalty rates will allow Tektronix to expand its ability to develop and manufacture advanced next-generation test solutions for the 3G CDMA market, including cdma2000, WCDMA and 1xEV," said Marvin Blecker, senior vice president of technology transfer for Qualcomm. "We are pleased that Tektronix has chosen to expand its license to help meet the growing demand for CDMA wireless solutions."

class technology enables Tektronix to create state-of-the-art 3G test solutions - and in turn, enable designers and manufacturers to successfully develop and install the infrastructure needed to meet the growing demands of today's wireless customers."
